

Amanda Harris

Student at Holy Names High School

Developer of GapJumper App, Winner of the Congressional App Challenge 2016

Amanda Harris is a senior at Holy Names High School in Oakland, CA. During high school, after discovering a passion for coding, she and two friends created an app called GapJumper, that highlights the injustice of the gender wage gap. In March 2016, the app won the Congressional App Challenge for Congresswoman Barbara Lee's District. Amanda's story is one of resilience and empowerment, and she will provide insights into the mind of a girl to help girls' service providers support the development of self-esteem.
